Richard Bong's Plane Found

After 80 years, in the jungle of Papua New Guinea, a team has found wreckage of the fighter plane flown by Wisconsin ace pilot Richard I. Bong.

The Richard I. Bong Veterans Historical Center in Superior partnered with the nonprofit group Pacific Wrecks to find the Lockheed P-38 Lightning fighter plane. Bong shot down 40 Japanese aircraft during World War II — the most of any American pilot and a record that still holds today.

Bong dubbed the plane “Marge” after his girlfriend, Marge Vattendahl, who he later married. In 1944, another pilot, Tom Malone, was behind the controls doing weather reconnaissance when the twin-engine fighter malfunctioned and crashed into a ravine in the jungle.

Malone survived the crash. But the plane was not recovered.

While the team discovered the remains of the fighter, the remains of the wreck will not be coming to Wisconsin. Taylan said the plane is the property of Papua New Guinea and the country's national museum and art gallery now own the aircraft.

May Flying

Steve Ward has been flying this 40 size stick plane that he got this year at the Beloit swap meet.

David Gonzalez flew this P-51 Mustang that he got at the recent Lodi swap meet. This craft is expertly piloted by Luke Skywalker and R2-D2.

David Gonzalez also brought out this Nexa, formerly VQ models A-24 Banshee. It has a great scale appearance with the open cockpit and crew in their positions.

Mike McCullough maidenied this Eflite Carbon Z T-28. It's a big and beautiful plane and flies really well.
